

Appendix 1: Wording in T125 and Zhu Fonian, and not in Dharmarakṣa

As already noted (p. 37 ff.), all T125 discourse feature a rich range of markers regularly appearing in other Zhu Fonian texts, but never appearing in Dharmarakṣa. The list of markers used to make this determination follows. For reasons of space, I refrain from presenting distribution and counts of these items; interested readers can verify that information for themselves using digital searching. For the same reason, I have not given glosses. Some items are also treated in more detail in Chi, Lin, and Radich (in preparation).²⁴⁸

²⁴⁸ See also Chi, Lin, and Radich, in preparation; but note that this present list is a somewhat artificial subset of the larger set of Zhu Fonian markers, since (a) markers listed here all occur in T125, whereas markers occurring only in other Zhu Fonian works can also serve as perfectly serviceable distinguishers of his style overall, and (b) some of the markers listed here occur in quantities below the thresholds for selection of evidence in Chi, Lin, and Radich (forthcoming).

Appendix 5: Possibly anomalous features in individual T125 discourses

Discourses are only listed in this Appendix if they feature more than two or more items of evidence in the classes discussed in this study. Thus, discourses omitted include only one item of evidence, or none. Markers have been given identifier numbers to allow readers to cross-reference to other Appendices, where they can see the distribution patterns for each marker. #D identifiers refer to Appendix 2, "Wording in Dharmarakṣa and not in Zhu Fonian"; #O identifiers refer to Appendix 3, "Wording in original Zhu Fonian works and not in translations"; #L identifiers refer to Appendix 4, "Wording in late Zhu Fonian works and not in early works".

Possible Mahāyāna: the term "Mahāyāna", *triyāna 三乘, the itemised set śrāvaka(yāna)-pratyekabuddha(yāna)-buddha(yāna), the bodhisattva path as generalised goal, the ambition of "becoming a Buddha like Śākyamuni", bodhicitta, six pāramitās, echoes of the "cult of the text", multiple bodhisattvas in the same scene, dharmakāya.

Parallels: Part parallel (Maghadeva-sutta MN 83).

Rare phraseology shared with T2045 Preface: 有所由.

Post-398 phraseology: 倬中, 拘尸城, 普波.

Other factors: seven-character verse (Nattier unpublished 2012); a five-piṭaka model of the canon (550c9–10; Mizuno 1989: 34; Mizuno points out an interesting parallel in Harivarman's *Satyasiddhi, T1646 [XXXII] 352c14–15; a similar model espoused by T1507—which is commenting upon EĀ²⁵⁰).

EĀ 3.1 (average length across witnesses 509 characters)

²⁵⁰ Palumbo (2013): 224–227. The key verse reads: 契經一藏律二藏/阿毘曇經為三藏/方等大乘義玄邃/及諸契經為雜藏, T125(1) (II) 550c9–10. Palumbo holds that this verse espouses rather a fourfold model of the canon, which identifies the *vaipulya-Mahāyāna with the *Kṣudrakapīṭaka, 222–224. However, I find it hard to imagine that any text would propose that Mahāyāna sutras should be called "Kṣudrakapīṭaka", or espouse such an outlier notion of the contents of the Kṣudrakapīṭaka (which are certainly otherwise variable, but within certain limits). Based upon his interpretation of this verse, Palumbo then develops a complex theory of T1507 here performing a "hermeneutical twist" upon its root text, which he locates as part of a wider pattern of amplified Mahāyānification in T1507. If the root verse is ambiguous, however, it seems simpler to trust T1507 as faithfully spelling out its intended meaning—especially if we believe, as Palumbo argues, that T1507 was written by the same people responsible for the translation of the root text.
