PANORAMA

THE PROBLEM

As the line between our physical and digital selves becomes increasingly blurry, sexual, and reproductive data rights must be safeguarded as a key lever of bodily autonomy and gender equality.

As people become more migratory due to political, climate, and other reasons, and with the proliferation of AI and digital tools, the need to bridge the digital divide is urgent. We must ensure that the people who have the hardest time accessing health care and information can do so.

However, if we cannot also ensure data privacy—particularly when it comes to sexual and reproductive health data and the ways in which these data make people particularly vulnerable—then increasing digitization only serves to put people who are already marginalized at greater risk.

THE OPPORTUNITY

Group of thought leaders came together on the sidelines of UNGA 78 and identified tangible immediate steps:

- Conduct gap analysis of existing frameworks
- Develop case studies across the lifecycle process as a digital user
- Engage key stakeholders

WE NEED YOU

We need a determined, passionate, and cohesive coalition to challenge the complex and vital issues surrounding digital rights, privacy, and sexual & reproductive health and rights data.

- Do you encounter these issues - around data privacy, sharing, consent in your work?
- Where is the field of disaster medicine at with regards to these issues?
- Who are the key stakeholders to engage in this field in this work?
