Note: The Opaque condition was constructed is such a way that what mattered was to find an unplausible relation between the base and the "derivation". Hence, while building the material we focused on transparent vs. nontransparent pairs rather than fully Opaque condition. Some pairs are then real derivations but the base which was presented with was not related at all (WINE-winning, SPIN-spineless).

The phonological transformation in the opaque condition is not considered as a problem because such transformations are common in French and in English
